J-ALERT is a system that enables the Japanese Government to instantly convey emergency information to the people in Japan. Using artificial satellites and terrestrial channels, the National Government conveys information about situations in which there is little time to respond, such as information about ballistic missiles or earthquake early warnings (from the Cabinet Secretariat/Japan Meteorological Agency via the Fire and Disaster Management Agency) through broadcasting using the Disaster Prevention and Administrative Radio System or Emergency Alert e-mails to people's mobile telephones/smartphones.

In the event that J-ALERT sends emergency information to people due to a ballistic missile flying over/falling within the Tokyo Metropolitan Area, you need to take evacuation measures immediately. If you are outside, evacuate immediately to a nearby building or underground. If there are no buildings nearby, take cover next to a large object, lying face-down on the ground and protecting your head. If you are inside, move away from the windows or move to a room without windows.
